

Compliance Shouldn't Start at Audit Time

The Growing Compliance Burden

Regulations like NIS2, DORA, ISO 27001, and GDPR are raising the bar for organizations across every industry.

But compliance is still a manual process that involves chasing evidence, preparing documentation, and gathering information across multiple systems. For many teams, audit preparation becomes a project of its own.

Why Organizations Are Struggling

- Security evidence is often spread across dozens of disconnected tools and platforms.
- Compliance teams spend weeks gathering documentation, validating controls, and preparing reports for auditors and executives.
- Many organizations simply don't know where to start, while others spend more time proving security than improving it.
- As regulations continue to evolve and penalties continue to rise, organizations need a faster and more sustainable approach to compliance.
